Part 3 :

Films are a good way about teaching people about religion because some people don't enjoy reading books or finding it out on the internet but if you where to give them a film which they would enjoy then they would understand religion more because they found the film interesting and I deeply support this point because sometimes I don't like to read a book and would definitely prefer to watch a movie so that's why I think movies can be good for representing religion.

Films are a bad way of teaching people about religion because instead of giving them tasks to find about online it is just there for them to watch and it is not giving them the own initiative to go and find out about it and even though films might be more interesting than a book but reading enhances your knowledge and if everybody used films instead of writing then not a lot of people would know how to spell easy words because they would have been watching films to long instead of reading a book. And also a film can easily disappear from the face of the earth but a book you can keep and if you forget something you can go back to it.

A better way about teaching people about Christianity could maybe be getting them to learn more about it [ in depth] get them to read books to research stuff on the internet about it watch a documentary make posters for them to take home that could be a better way because it gets them doing work and can be interesting and fun because people like to remember the good things about life and if they were to find making a poster fun then they can remember most things that were on the poster which could be a better way for teaching people about Christianity.
